

Third and Sixth avenues, to Fourteenth street, are to be swept in a like manner once a week, and all the dust removed immediately; and all streets below Chambers are to be cleaned during the night, and before the hour of 7 A. M., between May 1 and Oct. 1, and during the night and before the hour of 9 A. M., between Oct. 1 and May 1. When the performance of the work is rendered impracticable by the weather, the City Inspector may designate a later hour for it, or dispense with it temporarily, but not for a period longer than one week. The contractor must remove snow, hail and ice from the front of public buildings and places within twenty-four hours after seasons, and keep the streets passable for vehicles, and clean gutters intersecting them. He must also take off dirt, manure, garbage, &c., from the streets, as fast as it can be collected, and receive from the Grand Aqueduct Department and carry away all filth taken from the receiving basins and reservoirs. He will be forced to the performance of the contract by fines for delinquencies; and if he neglects it for a week, it is optional in the Common Council to annul the contract or compel a specific performance thereof by the contractor or his sureties.

Base Ball—Eagle Club vs Knickerbocker.

The conquering game of a home-and-home match between the above well-known Clubs, which has laid over from last year, was played yesterday, at the Elysian Fields, Hoboken, and resulted in an unexpected, but overwhelming defeat of the parent of all the Base Ball Clubs. Play commenced at 3:50. The Knickerbockers took the first innings at the bat, speedily running up 4 runs on their score, and disposing of the Eagles for a round 0 in their first innings. The Knickerbockers, on resuming their places at the bat, rather astonished the Eagles by increasing their score to 12 runs, and soon after disposed of their antagonists for only 2 runs, the game standing 12 to 2. Up to this time, GELSTON, a first rate player, had been playing as catcher, and BIXBY in the field. On this occasion GELSTON'S play was a failure at that point, and a change was found necessary in that and other positions in the field, which gave the chances of the game entirely in favor of the Eagles. GELSTON was put on at short field, which he admirably filled during the match. BIXBY took the first base, and he distinguished himself by the number of men he put out on first base, and the innumerable balls sent to him by the pitcher without a miss on his part. BRINCKERHOFF was put on as catcher in place of GELSTON, and he ably filled the post. In fact from this time, as the score will show, the game was entirely in favor of the Eagles. It will be seen what large scores were made by most of the players; some were made by over throws, others by a decided looseness in the fielding of some of the Knickerbockers, but a number of fine runs were made by undeniable good batting, BRINCKERHOFF'S play exceeding the rest, one hit sending the ball over the fields, beyond the flag staff and beyond the pavilion, which brought him home amid the cheers of the spectators. WILLIAMS also made a home strike, and BIXBY'S batting was also very effective, although not as prolific of runs. The Third Base was well filled by PLOUSE, but all did themselves credit, especially in working up against a losing game in the early part of the match.

On the part of the Knickerbockers, WELLING as pitcher, and in the last two or three innings, when he changed with WRIGHT as catcher, played very well, under the depressing influences surrounding his side. WRIGHT played pretty well, but came up too close behind the striker to prevent runs from being made between the first and second bases—a foolish practice—runs home often being effected, as were several in this match, by the ball being pitched so far over the striker's head, and contrary to the sixth rule, as even to go out of the reach of the catcher. DAVIS at long field, and STEPHENS at first base, distinguished themselves.

But apart from the good play of the Eagles, the Knickerbockers might lay part of their defeat to the absence of some of their principal players, prominent among whom was DE BOST, their catcher, who was lame, and whose loss was severely felt. During the match, and also at another between the Mutual and Monument Club, there were more than 3,000 spectators in the neighborhood of the Elysian Fields.

After the match, refreshments were served up to the members of the two Clubs and their friends and guests in the Pavilion, at which some pretty and complimentary things were said by Mr. DAVIS, President of the Knickerbockers, and Mr. BIXBY, of the Eagles, in which the latter, whilst receiving the trophy of victory—the ball—took occasion to say that the Eagles, whilst playing the match felt that they were simply contending with friends, and that the great disparity in the score arose from the absence of some of the Knickerbockers' principal players. The following is the score:
